

About NRL

What is NRL?

Northumbria Research Link (NRL) is a growing collection of Northumbria University's research outputs that is made freely available to students and researchers worldwide. The material includes articles, conference papers, books, book chapters, exhibitions, radio and television outputs, and theses.

If you are a Northumbria University researcher wishing to submit your work, please read the NRL Deposit Licence, the NRL Policies and the NRL Deposit Guidelines.

Finally, please contact your School "Guardian of Outputs." Each School has designated a "Guardian of Outputs". They are the link between the School and the Repository administration and are the initial point of contact for research staff. To find out the name of the Guardian of Output in your School, email the Research Support team (research@northumbria.ac.uk), or e-mail the Repository Manager at:

lr.openrepository@northumbria.ac.uk

If you are not affiliated to a School please fill in the Deposit Submission Form, including as much information as possible, and send to: lr.openrepository@northumbria.ac.uk

Advantages of NRL

- NRL will increase the visibility and readership of the University's research outputs, whilst respecting any copyright agreements entered into by our authors.
- It will help to preserve intellectual output by centrally co-ordinating and managing the storage and retrieval of institutional assets.
- Global open access through NRL will both promote University branding and raise the profile of the individual researcher.
- It will assist in research management and assessment – Research Assessment Exercise (RAE), Research Excellence Framework (REF).
- It is a platform for information and data sharing which will help to facilitate research.
- It will enable the University to comply more easily with the open access requirements of research funders.

Copyright

To submit to Northumbria Research Link you need to have either retained the intellectual property in that work, or have permissions from the rights holder(s) to archive the work with us. Permissions must be obtained for all third party materials used.

If you have already published in a journal you may have assigned some rights to a third party. This does not necessarily mean that it cannot be included in NRL.

Library staff will check copyright permissions for you.

Some publishers will allow authors to archive their work in repositories. Some will allow the use of the final published version, whilst others will allow deposit of the author's final peer-reviewed version – perhaps after an embargo period – but not allow deposit of the final published version. Library staff will contact you if a different version is required other than the one you have sent for submission.

Contacts

Further information may be obtained from:

lr.openrepository@northumbria.ac.uk

linda.younger@northumbria.ac.uk

ln.copyright-clearance-centre@northumbria.ac.uk

Library and Learning Services
Research, Regional and European Affairs