History at Northumbria University

The Historians at Northumbria pride themselves in offering exciting and innovative undergraduate and postgraduate degrees in History. After a significant number of new appointments there are now 24 History staff, teaching a wide range of modules that cover diverse subjects over large spans of time and significant geographical range. Moreover, History offers a vibrant research culture. All of our optional modules are informed by staff research interests and expertise, and, like our seminars and conferences, are designed to engage students with the latest research carried out in the discipline of History. Please visit our website for more details: www.northumbria.ac.uk/history
Welcome to the fourth edition of the History research newsletter. The last four years have witnessed a transformation in our research portfolio and this came to fruition with our REF 2014 submission in December. The submission included 20 monographs and 60 articles as well as three strong impact case studies. Staff in History are right to be proud of their publishing, bidding, dissemination, and impact efforts and David Gleeson is to be applauded for his hard work in leading the submission. We were pleased that two of our staff received research promotions this year: David Gleeson is now a Professor of American History and James McConnel is Reader in History. Congratulations also go to Henry Knight on winning two prizes – the Arthur Miller Centre First Book Prize and a Gold Medal in the Florida Book Awards – for his recent monograph, Trope of Hope: California, Florida, and the Selling of American Paradise, 1869-1929. Congratulations also go to those staff who were awarded research fellowships and external funding, including Michael Cullinane who won an AHRC Early Career Fellowship for his work on Theodore Roosevelt.

Our research groups continue to be clusters of excellence and have been strengthened over the last year with the appointment of new staff. Professor Tom Lawson joined us from Winchester University and has helped steer the Histories of Activism and British Worlds research groups. Likewise, Professor Tony Webster joined us from Liverpool John Moores University to provide additional quality and vigour to the same groups. Tawny Paul, an Early Career Researcher specialising in Early Modern history, joined us from Edinburgh University and alongside our new Anniversary Fellow in Early Modern history, Anja-Silvia Goeing, has provided range and depth to our Medieval and Early Modern group. The arrival of Professor Tony Badger, formerly of Cambridge University, will be an important addition to the US History group and to the ever-strengthening American Studies area. The groups have been...

the key to the hosting and organization of several major conferences over the last year, including a conference marking the 500 year anniversary of the Battle of Flodden and the annual conferences of the Social History Society, the Transatlantic Studies Association, and HOTCUS. Next year we look forward to hosting the 60th anniversary conference of the British Association for American Studies.

We continue to develop our collaborations with universities, archives, and museums. This year saw the successful launch of the Presidential History Network (a collaboration of staff from Northumbria, UCL, Durham, Queen Mary); and the Labour and Society research group (Northumbria-Newcastle) and Network of Irish Historians in North-East England (Northumbria-Newcastle-Teesside) continue to organise joint events. One highlight of the year was the successful public lecture series on the First World War that was organised by James McConnel in partnership with the Tynemouth World War I Commemoration Project. Gaby Mahlberg continues to help shape and support our impact agenda by working with staff as they develop their links with external agencies and media outlets. Staff are encouraged to work with Gaby and the new Faculty Impact Manager, Tom Vickers, in developing the impact side of their research.

Our PGR community has grown again and now numbers nineteen. We had four completions this year and look forward to even more in the next year. PGR students have been active participants in the research groups, have had a number of article published in quality journals, have helped organise workshops and conferences, and have been successful in seeking external funding from the AHRC, the Eccles Centre at the British Library, the British Association for American Studies, the Economic History Society, the Society for the Study of Labour History, and the Royal Historical Society.

As you’ll see from the following pages, the History team have been involved in much more activity than I can mention here and have exciting plans for the future. For even more information, please feel free to browse our web pages (currently in the process of being updated) that contain links to our activities, networks, projects, and social media pages.

We would also welcome your attendance at our many events and feel free to contact me with any queries. For further details please visit

External Funding

This year has seen a record amount of research bidding and some notable success stories, including Tanja Bueltmann’s ESRC Future Leaders award and Michael Cullinane’s AHRC Early Career Fellowship. We also had a bumper crop of small grants and research fellowships this year, so congratulations go to James McConnel, Anja-Silvia Goeing, Daniel Laqua, Tawny Paul, Mike Cullinane, and Randall Stephens. History was also pleased to have been part of the teams awarded the AHRC Block Grant Partnership in Heritage and the AHRC Being Human: a Festival of the Humanities.

Grants and Fellowships

- Tanja Bueltmann was awarded an ESRC Future Research Leaders grant of £235,000 for her project ‘European, Ethnic and Expatriate: A Longitudinal Comparison of German and British Social Networking and Associational Formations in Modern-day Asia’.

- Michael Cullinane was awarded an AHRC Early Career Fellowship of £120,564 for his project ‘Memorial Communities and Presidential Legacy: Remembering Theodore Roosevelt’.

- Michael Cullinane also won a Franklin D. Roosevelt President Library research grant for his work on FDR’s use of Theodore Roosevelt in politics and public memory.

- Gaby Mahlberg took up a Research Fellowship at the Herzog August Library in Wolfenbüttel/Germany to study ‘The Translation, Distribution and Reception of English Republican Works in the German-speaking area, c 1650-1850’ (July-August 2014).

- Randall Stephens received a Lynn E. May, Jr. Study Grant at the Southern Baptist Historical Library and Archives in Nashville, Tennessee. This was to work on his forthcoming book, The Devil’s Music: Christianity and Rock since the 1950s.

- Henry Knight was awarded a research fellowship at the Huntington Library in California to work on ‘Pacific Reach: California and Hawaii through the Progressive Era’.

- James McConnel took up a research fellowship at Trinity College, Dublin to work on ‘Irish Ballads of the First World War’.

- In the spring of 2014, Daniel Laqua was a Senior Visiting Research Fellow at the Institute of European History in Mainz (IEG).

Tanja Bueltmann was awarded an ESRC Future Research Leaders grant of £235,000 for her project ‘European, Ethnic and Expatriate: A Longitudinal Comparison of German and British Social Networking and Associational Formations in Modern-day Asia’. The project investigates the role ethnic and cultural organisations play in British and German expatriate social networking in Asia to shed light on why ethnicity remains a key chain in their migratory experience, life and identity, as well as their interactions with the host society in Asia. Tanja published, together with Graeme Morton and Andrew Hinson, a textbook on the Scottish Diaspora (Edinburgh University Press), and put the finishing touches to her second monograph Clubbing Together: Ethnicity, Civility and Formal Sociability in the Scottish Diaspora to 1930 (to be published by Liverpool University Press in September).

David Gleson’s new book The Green and the Gray: The Irish and the Confederate States of America was published in September 2013, in the Civil War America Series with the University of North Carolina Press. He is editing a collection of essays for the University of South Carolina Press entitled The Civil War as Global Conflict: Transnational Meanings of the American Civil War to be published in 2014. His essay on the Irish in the Civil War in Reconfiguring the Union: Civil War Transformations ed. Iwan Morgan, was published by Palgrave this summer and an article co-written with Don MacRaild and Tanja Bueltmann on English ethnicity in North America for the Journal of American Ethnic History will appear next summer.

David continues as Co-I of the AHRC funded English Diaspora project, editing a collection entitled England and English Culture in North America. The team has also had an article entitled ‘Invisible Diaspora? English Ethnicity in the United States before 1920’. The team also had an article published by the Journal of American Ethnic History. The main focus of work over the last year has been on the project’s impact activities in Newcastle with the Icons of Englishness series at the Lit & Phil, and in Charleston, South Carolina, for the project exhibition on the English at the College of Charleston Library.

Joe Hardwick finished his book which examines how the Church of England responded to the expansion of the settler dominions across the British Empire in the first half of the 19th century (under contract with Manchester University Press, ‘Studies in Imperialism’ series). The book looks at how the Church sought to present itself as an established and national institution, in spite of the fact that the Empire did not recognise a privileged Church.
James McConnel spent summer 2013 as the inaugural CENDARI research fellow at Trinity College Dublin, working on a new project on the topic of Irish ballads of the First World War. This year he organised a major lecture series marking the centenary of the First World War at Northumbria: http://www.northumbria.ac.uk/sd/academic/sass/events/sassevents/ww1lecseries. James’s The Irish Parliamentary Party and the Third Home Rule Crisis was published by Four Courts Press in spring 2013 and he has an article on Irish military history forthcoming in History Ireland and another on Robert Burns and W.E. Gladstone forthcoming in History Scotland. He also gave a paper on ‘Irish ballads of the First World’ at the English Literature Seminar paper, Newcastle University. Furthermore, he delivered a keynote paper on ‘It’s a Long Way to Tipperary: Ireland and the Great War’ at University College Cork. James has also organised a lecture series on the First World War, featuring papers from Hew Strachan, Martin Pugh, John Lewis-Stempel, John Derry, Edward Madigan, Gary Sheffield, Andrew Lambert and Joanna Bourke.

Colin Reid is currently working on three separate articles/book chapters. The article is a cultural history of Irish Protestants in Britain, 1850-1980, which I hope to finish in the New Year. He is contributing to two books, both of which will be published in 2015: one called Communities of Despair (edited by Aaron Edwards, Gareth Mulvena and Richard Reed), where his chapter is on the psyche of unionism in peace process Northern Ireland. The other book is a collection (edited by Don MacRaild and Kyle Hughes) sponsored by the Society for the Study of Nineteenth Century Ireland on crime, for which Colin is writing about Irish lawyers and political trials during the nineteenth century. Colin is currently considering ideas to write a book on Irish poets and political culture during the nineteenth and twentieth centuries.

Tom Lawson’s latest book The Last Man: a British genocide in Tasmania was published by IB Tauris at the end of January 2014. This book follows on from the collection which Tom co-edited in 2008 on The Memory of the Holocaust in Australia and charts an intellectual journey from thinking about the Holocaust to thinking more generally about genocide and its memorialisation. Tom is now working on a more general study of genocide in the British world, in which he hopes to examine the interactions of Holocaust and genocide memory across national boundaries in the colonial and post-colonial world.

Tony Webster has been working on British imperial history in Asia for over thirty years. His most prominent publications are Gentlemen Capitalists: British Imperialism in Southeast Asia 1780-1890 (Tauris 1998); The Debate on the Rise of the British Empire (Manchester UP 2006); The Richest East India Merchant: The Life & Business of John Palmer of Calcutta 1767-1836 (Boydell 2007) and The Twilight of the East India Company: The Evolution of Anglo-Asian Commerce and Politics 1790-1860 (Boydell 2009). He has also published in this field in Economic History Review, Historical Journal, Enterprise & Society, Modern Asian Studies and The Journal of Imperial and Commonwealth History. He has a book chapter coming out in November 2013 on co-operatives in Burma/Myanmar in the 20th century. He is currently working with Professor Ulbe Bosma of the International Institute of Social History in Amsterdam on an edited volume, Commodities & Networks in the Asian world since 1750.

In July 2014 several group members gave papers at the Global English conference. This conference served to celebrate the near-conclusion of the AHRC-funded Locating the Hidden Diaspora project. David Gleeson and Tanja Bueltmann are Co-Investigators of the project, while James McConnel and Joe Hardwick were involved as associated researchers, contributing chapters to the forthcoming edited collection that David is looking after.
Dr Tanja Buelmann has launched an international research project to explore the impact of ethnicity on expatriates in Asia. The project, which has received a grant of £235,000 by the Economic and Social Research Council, aims to advance understanding of present-day expat life and identity in Asia, particularly among policy makers, major businesses and the expat communities themselves. Ultimately, the research aims to explore the changing role of ethnicity in British and German social networking in Asia with a view to enhancing expat community life.

The initial stages of research will identify the social make-up of ethnic clubs and societies, which are central engagement platforms for expats. Dr Buelmann anticipates that these findings will uncover a specific set of characteristics. She said: "On the whole, expats living in Asia tend to be a fairly niche group and that is reflected too in the membership of ethnic societies. While different groups of people will travel to countries such as Australia in search of sun or a new way of life, the key driver for many expats in Asia is not the country itself, but the business for which they work. This often means that these expat groups are made up of wealthy, business focussed individuals and their families who are required to quickly adapt to their new surroundings."

However, how expats integrate varies between cultures, and an understanding of these diversities, and the role of ethnicity, will help not only ethnic associations, but also major employers and diplomatic missions to better cater for the needs of expats. Ultimately, this understanding can lead to greater confidence levels for expats themselves in terms of shedding new light on expat life and increasing the benefits of international working. For businesses, employing these findings can support recruitment and retention of expatriate work-forces.

The three-year project will involve fieldwork in Asian countries to interview expats and explore the different experiences of German and British communities. In year three, key findings will be presented back to the participants, ethnic organisations and policy makers through a conference and other engagement activities to promote knowledge exchange.

Together with Gita Deneckere and Christophe Verbruggen (both Ghent University), Daniel Laqua ran a project to explore transnational connections during and beyond Belgium’s Belle Époque. This scholarly undertaking involved twenty historians and resulted in a special issue of the Revue belge de philologie et d’histoire / Belgisch tijdschrift voor filologie en geschiedenis: ‘Beyond Belgium: Encounters, Exchanges and Entanglements, 1900–1925’.

Northumbria University hosted the annual conference of the Historians of Twentieth Century America organization. Attended by approximately 100 guests and speakers, the conference was coordinated by Joe Street and Michael Cullinane. The three-day event (5-7 July 2013) included sessions on numerous American social movements, including Black Power, various conservative groups and anti-war protest. Its keynote lecture was given by Prof. Wesley Hogan of Duke University, who discussed the relationship between the civil rights movement and memory in the United States.

Together with Vike Plock (University of Exeter), Nicole Robertson organised a public event on clothes and communities in conjunction with the People’s History Museum, Manchester. The event took place on 29 June 2013 and included a public lecture by Charlotte Wildmann (University of Manchester) on ‘Working-class women, fashion, glamour and shopping in Manchester, 1910s-1939’ and an address on the work of the Museum’s Textile Conservation Studio (presented by Leanne Tonkin, Textile Conservator at the People’s History Museum). A display of material from the Museum’s archive and object collection was created and a virtual exhibition was uploaded onto the Tailored Trades’ project website: www.tailoredtrades.exeter.ac.uk

Two workshops, as part of the AHRC Research Network on ‘Tailored Trades: Labour, Clothes and Professional Communities 1880-1939’ directed by Vike Plock (University of Exeter) and Nicole Robertson, took place at Northumbria on 13 September and 8 November 2013. Speakers included Charlotte Alston (Northumbria, member of Histories of Activism group), Laura Ugolini (University of Wolverhampton), Pete Maw (University Leeds), Jutta Schwarzkopf (Bielefeld University), Janet Greenlees (Glasgow Caledonian University) and Joseph Melling (University of Exeter).

The research group continues to be part of a joint research forum with colleagues from Newcastle University, the Labour and Society Research Group (LSRG). Its programme has included a one-day workshop on ‘Death and Labour’, and seminars with speakers such as Paul Corthorn, Maire Cross and Laura Cerasi. The most recent event was on 5 November 2013 and saw Tony Webster (Northumbria, member of Histories of Activism group) present a paper on ‘Britain’s Forgotten Global Commercial Giant: The Rise of Co-operative Wholesale Society’s International Business Networks 1863-1950’.

On Saturday 15 June 2013, the Histories of Activism Group and the LSRG organised The Ray Challinor Memorial Conference in conjunction with the North East Labour History Society. This event – in memory of Ray Challinor, a prominent labour historian, active member of the North East Labour History group and former head of history at Newcastle Polytechnic - was organised by Avram Taylor and Adam Young (a PGR member of the Histories of Activism group) alongside Don Watson (from the North East Labour History Group). Papers were given by staff from Durham University, Newcastle University, Staffordshire University and University of Sunderland.

Activism and Integrity. Workshop at Northumbria University, 16 December 2013: This workshop, which was run in conjunction with the Integrity Project (but which was fully funded by the Histories of Activism group), explored the ways in which concepts of integrity have shaped debates among activists from across the political spectrum; how it has governed action as well as intention; and how forms of organization and collective action are negotiated to preserve the integrity of the actors.

In early 2014, the Histories of Activism Research group in collaboration with the LSRG hosted a one-day workshop on ‘Activism in the Face of Crisis: The 1970s between Conflict and Contestation’. Whilst the 1970s are a decade associated with prolonged strikes, economic turmoil and rising unemployment, they are also identified with growing cultures of activism (for example, second wave feminism, the environmentalist movement and protest against nuclear weapons). This one-day workshop will explore numerous forms of protest and activism in this period. The event will be organised by Daniel Laqua and Nicole Robertson.

Tom Lawson has just established and is now the joint editor of a book series Palgrave Studies in the History of Genocide.
From 8 to 10 April 2014, Northumbria University will host the conference of the Social History Society. The event is the largest annual gathering of social and cultural historians in the UK, and Prof. Colin Jones (Queen Mary, University of London) will be the keynote speaker. The conference will comprise seven parallel strands. The ‘Histories of Activism’ group will take charge of the local preparations, with Nicole Robertson and Daniel Laqua as the lead organisers. The SHS conference also sees the inauguration of a new conference strand on ‘Global and Transnational Approaches’, with Daniel Laqua as a convenor alongside Pierre Fuller (Manchester University) and Emma Hunter (Gonville and Caius College, Cambridge).

Joe Hardwick organised a panel, entitled ‘Integrity and the Reform of Public Life in the Nineteenth-Century Transatlantic Worlds’ for the conference: Integrity Lost/Integrity Regained: Social Conditions and Institutional Pressures. Two-Day Conference held at the Literary and Philosophical Society, Newcastle, 11-12 April 2014. Joe Hardwick and James Gregory are currently developing this panel into an edited collection, entitled Cultures of Integrity, c. 1775-1851. The call for papers for the edited collection will be disseminated shortly.
Histories of Activism PGR Training
Events

- ‘Histories beyond borders: exploring transnational and international histories’ was a one-day workshop held on 30 April 2013. Following the success of a PGR workshop organised by members of the Histories of Activism research group in January 2011, this workshop brought together both postgraduate research students and early career researchers. It was organised by PhD students André Keil (whose research interests include European, especially British and German, history of the 19th and 20th centuries) and Lee Collins (whose research interests lie in 20th century Russian and British history), and the Histories of Activism research group’s convenors Nicole Robertson and Daniel Laqua. It included presentations by PGR members of the group - André Keil, Lee Collins and Paul Simpson - and academic members of staff - Charlotte Alston (Northumbria, member of Histories of Activism group), Daniel Laqua (Northumbria, member of Histories of Activism group) and James Koranyi (Durham University). The workshop attracted attendees from various universities around the country. A group activity, facilitated by Matt Perry (Newcastle University) and Maire Cross (Newcastle University), gave delegates the unique opportunity to discuss their own work with specialists in the field. The workshop also featured a session that explored current and future funding opportunities for international research, which was presented by Oliver Moss (Research Development Manager, Northumbria). The keynote paper was given by Rebecca Gill (University of Huddersfield) as part of the Labour and Society Research Group’s seminar series.

- Building on its success, another workshop for PGR students and early-career researchers is scheduled for early 2014. Two Northumbria PGR members of the Histories of Activism research group, André Keil (History) and Laura Hutchinson (Sociology), have submitted a successful bid to the Arts and Humanities Research Council to fund a 2-day workshop on Digital Humanities. The event is planned in co-operation with the Discovery Museum and Tyne and Wear Archives. It will offer its participants a variety of training sessions ranging from the potential uses of digitised archives to the new possibilities of digital media to present and disseminate research results within the broader public. The organising team will document the outcomes of the workshop with a specially created twitter hash tag and a dedicated blog.

The MEM group at Northumbria University in Newcastle upon Tyne has research expertise in early modern Britain, France, Germany, Italy, the Low Countries, Switzerland and Spain, with an ability to work on transnational subjects from a variety of interdisciplinary perspectives. Particular areas of strength include Italian Humanism, post-Reformation religious, book history, political and intellectual cultures in the British Isles, Germany and Switzerland; British revolutions of the seventeenth century and republicanism in a broad European context; the social and cultural history of early modern Britain with a particular focus on everyday life, material culture, beliefs and practices; literary and cultural appropriations of early modern texts; the urban history of pre-modern Europe; the history of late medieval and early modern France. Research expertise in medieval and early modern Spain covers issues of female authority, monarchy, power and religious cultures at the Castilian, Navarrese, and Aragonese courts. Starting with January 2014, the Medieval and Early Modern Research Group has launched a series of activities, among them brown bag lunches to discuss work in progress and monthly workshops on specific topics.

Anja-Silvia Goeing has published two books in 2013, one monograph on humanist biographies in humanist Italy, and one co-edited collected volume on collecting practices and the impact of material cultures on the transfers of knowledge in pre-modern and modern Europe: “what is kept, what is discarded”? She is interested in a variety of central questions about book history, information management and learning, and about knowledge and its acquisition in networks clustering in political and religious contexts: what philosophies and values informed and shaped pedagogy in these years? How were they taught in schools, colleges and religious institutions? What resources and traditions could they draw on, and how were they fashioned anew? How was knowledge disseminated in different parts of European Christendom, including those affected by religious reform movements?

Andrea Knox is currently researching early modern Irish women migrants in Spain and Portugal, rebel networks between Scottish and Irish women, and female espionage throughout the 16th and 17th centuries, particularly as part of the Mediterranean catholic network, and cultural matronage in early modern Spain. In addition, Andrea is also researching and writing about early modern Irish female religious, their secular sponsors, and their roles in the advocacy and provision of educational institutions for girls and women throughout the Iberian Peninsula in the 16th and 17th centuries.
Gaby is in the second year of her British Academy-funded research project on the ‘British Exiles and the Republican Tradition in Europe, c1660-1848’, for which she has visited archives in Oxford, London, Paris, Florence, Bern, Lausanne, Geneva, Rome, Rotterdam and The Hague. Her findings will feed into her second monograph on ‘English Republican Exiles in Europe’ (working title). Together with Dirk Wiemann at Potsdam University she has been editing two volumes of essays on republican thought and literature, European Contexts for English Republicanism (Farnham: Ashgate, 2013) and Perspectives on English Revolutionary Republicanism (Farnham: Ashgate, forthcoming); and with Cesare Cuttica (Paris 8) she is currently working on an edition of short essays entitled Patriarchal Moments (under contract with Bloomsbury Academic).

Neil Murphy is currently working on the monograph Behind the Mirror: Ceremonial Entries, Municipal Liberties and the Negotiation of Power in Valois France, 1328-1580. In addition to a continuing interest in the impact of plague in France from the mid-fourteenth to early-eighteenth centuries, he has also started work on a project examining the nature of English rule in sixteenth century France (The Crucible of Empire: The English Occupation of Boulogne, 1544-1550).

Carlos works mainly on the Spanish 15th century. His research focus is on cultural history, courtly literature, religious coexistence in the Iberian peninsula, diplomatic history and history of the Spanish Catholic empire. He is currently working on two separate projects on English translation of Don Quixote and on the medieval traditions of Iberian Mysticism, including Kabbalah and Sufism. Carlos is a peer reviewer for the Arts & Humanities Research Council and has obtained research scholarships from this body and from the Government of Navarre (Spain).

Lesley Twomey has an interest in history of doctrine and liturgy in medieval Spain. She has worked extensively on textiles and fabrics through archival work, study of artistic examples, and study of medieval texts. Her main interest is, however, study of poetry and prose writing about the Virgin Mary, deepening understanding of its underlying themes. Her publications present extensive text in translation from Latin, French, Catalan, and Castilian to make the sources accessible to reader.

Tawny’s research interests lie in the economic and social history of early-modern Britain, focusing especially on urban history, economic culture, gender, and the lives of non-elites. Her current research addresses the social history of debt. Her PhD compared the dynamics of interpersonal credit in two British provincial capitals, Edinburgh and Philadelphia, during the eighteenth century, focusing on themes of trust, reputation, social capital and masculinity in local credit relations. She is currently working on an article on the debtors’ prisons in Scotland and a monograph which examines masculinity and urban commercial culture. Tawny has interests in both academic and public history. She has worked professionally as an interpretive planner, helping to develop museum exhibitions and other heritage materials for the public. She has an academic interest in the links between history, memory and identity, and how history is ‘used in the present. Tawny’s postdoctoral research investigated how museums in Scotland present the nation’s past.

The US History Group has a diverse range of interests including politics, culture, race, and gender. Impressively, the group can boast expertise in several different eras of US History, including antebellum and post-bellum America, the Gilded Age and Progressive Era, and the so-called “American Century” or twentieth century. Northumbria University is fast-becoming one of the most exciting places to study and research US History and this has only been strengthened with the acquisition of new resources – including digital access to the major American newspapers. This year saw the launch of an exciting new organization (in association with staff at UCL, Durham and Queen Mary) called the Presidential History Network. The launch of the Network was supported by Northumbria University, including the direct involvement of Michael Cullinane and Sylvia Ellis. The network serves the academic needs of scholars interested in the United States’ presidency, individual presidents, and corollary interests in the institutional, political, or cultural history of the American polity. A one-day inaugural conference in late June at Northumbria—“A Presidential Nation: The Presidency in US History”—was well attended and received additional sponsorship from the U.S. Embassy London and from Routledge. For further information on the Networks events see http://presidentialhistorynetwork.wordpress.com/

Individual expertise and current research includes:

Professor in American Studies Brian Ward was featured on The One Show on May 28 and in a 30 minute documentary broadcast on BBC1 in the North East and Cumbria on June 1 both programmes based on his research into MLK’s 1967 visit to Newcastle and the discovery of a lost King speech. In September 2013 Brian was invited to speak at the German Historical Institute in Washington DC at an event to mark the 50th Anniversary of the March on Washington. He has given 7 talks on US history topics to A level students in Newcastle, Durham, London, Manchester and Huddersfield. Brian has also published two volumes on the US South: Citizenship and Identity in the Nineteenth Century South, co-edited with William A. Link, David Brown, and Martyn Bone (Gainesville: University Press of Florida, 2013); and The American South and the Atlantic World, co-edited with Martyn Bone and William A. Link (Gainesville: University Press of Florida, 2013), which included his chapter “Caryl Phillips, David Armitage, and the Place of the American South in the Atlantic and Other Worlds”. His article “Music, Musical Theater, and the Imagined South in Interwar Britain” appeared in the February 2014 issue of the Journal of Southern History.

At the 2014 British Association of American Studies (BAAS) conference at the University of Birmingham in April, Henry Knight was announced as the co-winner of the Arthur Miller Centre First Book Prize for his book, Tropic of Hopes: California, Florida, and the Selling of American Paradise, 1869-1929 (Gainesville: University Press of Florida, 2013). The book explores the promotion of California and Florida as semi-tropical states to American tourists, settlers, and investors, from the Civil War to the 1920s. Henry was also awarded a Gold Medal in the Florida Book Awards “Florida - Non-fiction” category for his book. The event featured also the Florida Folk Heritage Awards, the Florida Historic Preservation Awards, and two new inductees into the Florida Artists Hall of Fame—including rock musician, Tom Petty. The Florida Book Awards honour the best work written by Florida authors or about Florida culture in the previous year.

Michael Cullinane and Clare Elliott have published Perspectives on Presidential Leadership: An International View of the White House as part of Routledge’s Research in American Politics and Governance series (2014). The publication includes chapters from presidential scholars from the UK, Ireland and Canada, and an introduction from Prof. Iwan Morgan who organized the first UK survey of presidential leadership in 2011. The book takes up from that survey, examining the leadership qualities and presidential ranking game from an international perspective. The book project began as a conference, hosted by Northumbria University, and supported by a generous BAAS conference grant.

Sylvia Ellis launched her monograph, Freedom’s Pragmatist: Lyndon Johnson and Civil Rights (Gainesville: University Press of Florida, 2013), at the Institute for the Americas, University College London, on 24 October 2013 and has given several papers on this at schools and universities. Sylvia has also been involved in a number of commemorations of the JFK Assassination, including being an invited speaker/participant at an international conference on “JFK’s Presidential Heritage” (co-organised by the Kennedy Memorial Trust, the UCL Institute of the Americas and the Eccles...
Centre, and the Paul Mellon Professorial Fund); attended an invitation-only lecture by The Rt. Hon. David Miliband on “Britain, America, and Europe: Lessons from Kennedy” (organised by the Kennedy Memorial Trust at the British Library); attended a pre-screening of Parkland at the US Embassy London; delivered a paper on “JFK and Ireland” at a symposium on “JFK: Fifty Years On’ at the University of Sussex”; and wrote a piece for BBC History to commemorate the 50th anniversary of the JFK assassination. Sylvia has also delivered papers to schools in Newcastle and Birmingham on “Women in the Civil Rights Movements.”

Joe Street has obtained a book contract from University Press of Florida for his forthcoming book, Dirty Harry’s America: Clint Eastwood, Harry Callahan and the Conservative Backlash. In 2014 he will see two articles published: “Subcultures and Civil Rights: The Politics of Soul Music in Britain” in Anna Gough-Yates, Bill Osgerby and Matt Worley (eds.), Subcultures, Popular Music, and Social Change (Cambridge Scholars, forthcoming); and “Stax, Subcultures and Civil Rights: Young Britain and the Politics of Soul Music in the 1960s” in Stephen Tuck and Robin D.G. Kelley (eds.), The Other Special Relationship: Race and Rights in Britain and America (Palgrave, forthcoming). Street has also presented papers on Dr. Martin Luther King to sixth-formers at three separate events for schools in Newcastle upon Tyne, Durham and Birmingham University of Oslo, Glasgow University, Clare College Cambridge, Heidelberg University, and the University of East Anglia. At the November meeting of the Southern Historical Association in St Louis he gave an invited paper as part of a plenary session roundtable on the career and influence of the historian Bertram Wyatt-Brown. The forum will soon be published. In addition Randall was an invited presenter at a Harvard Divinity School conference on “Comparative Secularization and Innovation in Europe and the United States.” His paper, “Popular Culture and Pentecostalism: Comparing Britain and the United States,” will appear in an edited volume. Randall will be leading a masters seminar at Queen’s University in October. He has also authored several book reviews in the past year, one in the Wilson Quartley, as well as publishing a short article: “Unbucklin’ that Ole Bible Belt: Learning about the Solid Religious South from Freaks, Geeks, Outcasts, Losers, Wide-Eyed Prophets, Cranks, and Mountebanks,” in Fides et Historia (Winter/Spring 2014). Randall has also given a couple of talks on post-1945 America to A-level students.

Three Northumbria faculty members will be speaking at this year’s Transatlantic Studies Association conference in Ghent, Clare Elliott (Literature), Daniel Laqua (History), and Michael Cullinane (History).
Tanja Bueltmann, further to her new ESRC project, Tanja continued, as Co-I on the English Diaspora project funded by the AHRC. The project concludes in the autumn of 2014, and Tanja is currently co-authoring a monograph, with Project PI Prof Don MacRaidl, on English ethnic associations in North America for it. She has also authored, with David Gleeson and Don MacRaidl, and article for the Journal of American Ethnic History entitled “Invisible Diaspora? English Ethnicity in the United States before 1920”.

Members of the group have also had recent bidding success. Michael Cullinane won an AHRC Early Career Fellowship for his project on ‘Memorial Communities and Presidential Legacy: Remembering Theodore Roosevelt’ and an Franklin Dr. Roosevelt’ and a Franklin D. Roosevelt President Library research grant for his work on FDR’s use of Theodore Roosevelt in politics and public memory. Randall Stephens received a Lynn E. May, Jr., Study Grant, Southern Baptist Historical Library and Archives, Nashville, Tennessee, 2014-15. Henry Knight has received a one-month fellowship from the prestigious Huntington Library in California for his book project Pacific Reach: California and Hawaii through the Progressive Era.

David T. Gleeson has delivered several lectures and informal talks in the US and the UK on his recent The Green and the Gray: The Irish in the Confederate States of America (Chapel Hill: University of North Carolina Press, 2013). A Boston Globe reviewer praises it an “eye-opening account. . . . As [Gleeson’s] analysis unfolds, there is much that will surprise, perhaps even unsettle, Boston readers familiar with the abolitionists, the Massachusetts 54th, and the summertime encampments ofreenactors.” On May 31, 2014 Gleeson spoke to the American Civil War Roundtable UK on “Irish Confederates in 1864.”

The US History Group and related events have received outside support this year from the US Embassy, Harvard University Press, the University of North Carolina Press, and the Fulbright Foundation.
US Group Plans for 2015

In conjunction with Newcastle University’s History Programme the US History Group/American Studies will host a roundtable on “The State of Religion in American History,” on 26 March 2015. Presenters include Mathew Sutton (Washington State University, Heidelberg University); Andrew Preston (Cambridge University); Uta Balbier (King’s College London); Paul Harvey (University of Colorado); and Randall Stephens (Northumbria University). The roundtable will reflect on recent trends in the study of history. The American Historical Association reported in 2009 that religious history topped the list of member specializations. It had also outpaced cultural history as an area of concentration. That trend has continued since then and is reflected in a growing interest in religion within American Studies as well. Accordingly, participants in the March roundtable addressed questions such as: What accounts for the recent boom in American religious history? Is the study of religion in America reshaping the field in significant ways, or has it not had that great of an impact? What are scholars currently focusing on? and What are the prospects for future study? The event has received sponsorship from Harvard University Press. Talks are underway with the Journal of American Studies to published the papers from each of the participants in a special forum.

On 15 October, Nancy Hewitt and Steven Lawson (both Rutgers University) will visit campus and talk about their experiences of moving from writing scholarly monographs to writing a survey textbooks. This talk will have special interest and appeal to colleagues in other research groups, indeed across the Humanities.

Joe Street is organizing the 2015 British Association of American Studies (BAAS) Conference (60th Anniversary) to be held at Northumbria University in April. This represents the largest gathering of American Studies scholars in the UK and will feature a keynote address from the internationally renowned journalist Gary Younge. The conference will be immediately preceded by a two-day symposium, which will examine the history and legacy of the 1965 Voting Rights Act, perhaps the most important legislative act in American history.

US History seminar sessions and the 1964 symposium have had excellent participation from our Americanist PGRs. At the two-day 1964 symposium Antony McKenna (PhD student) presented on ‘‘Yeah, yeah, yeah...': The ‘Beatle Menace,’ Americanisation, and British Communists” and Megan Hunt (PhD student) delivered a paper on “Remembering Segregation and Activism in 1963-4: The Help and Hollywood’s Civil Right’s Movement.” The latter will be included in a collection of essays to be published by Edinburgh University Press. Hunt, McKenna and Alan Symons all presented at the PGR Conference as well.

In spring 2014 Brian Langley (PhD student) delivered a paper at the British Association of Nineteenth Century History at Rice University (Houston, Texas) on “Southern Claims Commission: Narratives of Loyal Dissent.”

Jonathan Coburn (History PhD candidate at Northumbria) has been awarded the John D Lees Prize for 2014 by the British Association for American Studies. The award money will help finance a trip to the US to undertake archival research for his PhD on Women Strike for Peace activists.

Stephen Bowman (PhD student in History at Northumbria) has had his D.C. Watt award-winning paper, “An Englishman Abroad and an American Lawyer in Europe: Harry Brittain, James Beck and the Pilgrims Society during the First World War,” accepted for publication in the Journal of Transatlantic Studies. This follows the publication of an earlier co-authored article with the same journal on “Interdependence Day and Magna Charta: James Hamilton’s public diplomacy in the Anglo-world.”

Anne Zetsche (PhD student in History at Northumbria) has also had an article, “The Ford Foundation’s Role in Promoting German-American Elite Networking during the Cold War” accepted for publication in the Journal of Transatlantic Studies.

In the spring Peter O’Connor successfully defended his PhD thesis: “The Inextinguishable Struggle Between North and South,’ American Sectionalism in the British Mind 1832-1865.”
